DEATH COMES AFTER 10 YEARS OF ILLNESS

Mrs. Catherine Hollstein, of Frankfort, died at her home Jan. 12th after an illness of ten years, at the age of 76 years, 6 months and 13 days.

Catherine Anna Hollstein, daughter of the late Mr. and Mrs. Conrad Andres, was born on a farm near Tinley Park July 15, 1864. Here she grew up and spent her youth. Born of Christian parents, she attended church at an early age and became a member of the Methodist church which she attended all her life.

January 31, 1886, she was united in marriage to Charles C. Hollstein, also of Tinley Park, by the Rev. G. L. Linper. After their marriage they came to Frankfort, living on a farm two miles south of the village. Here they resided until 1918 when they moved to town.

To this union were born nine children, the eldest, Charles and Caroline dying in infancy. One granddaughter, Katherine Sayers, also preceded her in death.

She is survived by her husband Charles, two sons, Wesley A., and Milton J., of Frankfort, five daughters, Mrs. Gilbert Sayers of Orland Park, Florence Hollstein and Mrs. Henry Heuser of Frankfort, Mrs. Lewis Fisher of Plainfield and Mrs. Wm. Schoeling also of Frankfort; two grandsons, Henry Heuser, Jr., and Carl Eugene Hollstein; one sister, Mrs. Elizabeth Hollstein of Long Beach, North Dakota.

Services were conducted at the Methodist church in Frankfort last Wednesday with burial in Pleasant Hill, Rev. R. Malek officiating.

Fire Lads to Sponsor Home Protection Drive

The Frankfort Volunteer Fire Department is sponsoring a Fire Prevention drive beginning Saturday, Jan. 18, and running 'till Feb. 1, according to an announcement by Fire Chief Henry Lühring.

According to Chief Lühring the members of the department will sponsor a community-wide campaign in an effort to introduce a new type of fire protection into every home and business house in Frankfort. Special arrangements have been made with the Liberty Fire Extinguisher Co. whereby the department may offer the Liberty Extinguisher, a new type of dry chemical machine on a service basis. In order to introduce this revolutionary type of extinguisher which is said to be absolutely stainless, odorless and harmless to any surface or fabric, it will be offered to Frankfort citizens, only by members of the fire department, who will sell the 3 pound extinguisher for a very nominal sum. In case any extinguisher sold under this arrangement is used in extinguishing a fire of any kind, it will be replaced free of charge by the manufacturer if the original can is returned to the fire department, accompanied by a letter telling how it was used and the results obtained.

In his statement, Chief Lühring reminded all Frankfort residents that every big fire was once a small fire and that 95 per cent of all fires can be extinguished with hand equipment, if action is obtained within the first three minutes. Many such fires can be extinguished with only minor damage even before the fire department arrives if quick action is taken.

The equipment now offered to Frankfort residents has been given exhaustive tests both in the laboratory and in surrounding towns with excellent results. In one case, a wooden shed which had been saturated inside and out with kerosene and gasoline was set ablaze in a 30 mile wind and the blaze was brought under control in less than 90 seconds.

According to Mr. Lühring the local truck will be equipped with several of the extinguishers and the department will have a generous supply of extinguishers on hand at all times.

America At The Cross Roads

By Chauncey W. Reed, Congressman
11th District, Illinois

The United States of America is at the cross roads. Down one road runs the path to dictatorship and involvement in the European war. Down the other lies the path to neutrality and peace. Soon Congress will be called upon to act on the most important piece of legislation that has ever confronted our national legislative body. Upon our law makers rests the responsibility of deciding whether or not our nation will remain a democracy and our people a free people or whether we will trod the path to dictatorship and strife.

If the so-called lease-lend bill, introduced under a misnomer of "a defense bill" for the purposes of propagandizing and hoodwinking the American people, with its pleasant sounding phrases but concealed therein insidious grants of unrestricted power to the Chief Executive, secures favorable consideration in the House and Senate, then whether the people of our nation like it or not and whether they believe it or not, we will have an actual dictatorship in the United States of America.

During the past week the House Committee on Foreign Affairs heard testimony given by Secretary of the Treasury Morgenthau, Secretary of State Hull and Secretary of War Stimson.

Numerous clashes occurred between interventionists and men who believe that our own national welfare should be our paramount concern.

One of the high lights of the hearings to date was a statement made by Secretary of War Stimson that he would be opposed to any amendments to the bill which would prohibit the transfer of United States Naval vessels to a foreign power. By this statement the Secretary implied that if the President desired at any time to transfer the whole or any part of the Navy of the United States to the possession of a foreign nation, he, as a Cabinet member would acquiesce in the transfer. In the opinion of the writer this statement by the Cabinet minister discloses the objectives in back of the bill which the Chief Executive is asking the Congress to pass. Apparently plans have already been formulated for the transfer of our Naval units to foreign waters. Surely there can be but one result if the sought for legislation is enacted into law.

The people of the United States will find themselves under a dictatorship, the nation will be plunged into the war, and it will not be long before our boys will be called to follow the ships.

Millions are being spent for war intervention propaganda and terrific efforts are being made to get the American public into a "war fever". Let's keep our feet on the ground, our heads clear, and our American boys in AMERICA.

Our veterans hospitals are filled to capacity now as the results of our participation in the last conflict. Your Congressman is against intervention and war.

(Editorial Note) Do not believe all the war hysteria that the bunk artists in Washington are shooting now. Remember the lies told the American people in 1916. Do not be deceived again, but rather write vigorous letters of protest to the congressmen and senators DEMANDING that America remain free and out of war. Pay no attention to the war and intervention alarmists.

FIRE AT OLD BREWERY

While a force of wreckers were engaged in dismantling the beer vats in the old Mitchell Brewery in Mokena last Saturday night, sparks from an acetylene torch set fire to a pile of cork and pitch. At first the workmen tried to fight the fire but could not put it out. The Mokena Fire Dept. was called. After several hours of hard fighting and the pumping of thousands of gallons of water on the blaze, it was finally put out. As the space in which the fire raged is fireproof, no special damage was done. Broken windows and holes chopped in the wooden sides of the building was the main damage.

The village fire siren became unruly and continued to blow after it was set off. The continued wail of the siren brought people to Mokena from all the nearby territory.

Brazil Speeds Construction of New Warships

Fleet Greatly Strengthened
By Eleven New Vessels
In Recent Months.

(Released by Western Newspaper Union.)

RIO DE JANEIRO.—Launching the eleventh warship within a few months, Brazil leads the parade of South American nations now rapidly "arming for defense" of the Western Hemisphere. The destroyer "Mariz e Barros" was launched in the Marine Arsenal shipyards on "Isle of Snakes" at Rio de Janeiro amid wild enthusiasm of cheering Brazilians, Americans and masses of spectators.

President Getulio Vargas personally officiated at the ceremonies, then laid the keels of four other war vessels to be rushed to completion in Brazil's rearmament program to build 50 warships as rapidly as possible.

"Sister ship" of the mighty destroyer, Marcilio Dias, launched last July, the Mariz e Barros is of the

GETULIO VARGAS
President of Brazil

Class A type. Patterned after the U. S. destroyer Mahan, it is the most perfect in construction and striking force ever built in Brazil. With the trawler Almirante Guilhem, and the eight mine-layers recently built, the Mariz e Barros is the eleventh warship to be launched by Brazil in recent months. All are planned to assist the U. S. Atlantic fleet in protecting the long coastline of South America to make the Western Hemisphere safe for the democracies.

The new destroyer has a displacement of 1,500 tons and a speed of 35½ knots delivered by its 45,000 horsepower engines. It is armed with five five-inch guns, four double anti-aircraft machine guns and 12 torpedo tubes in three groups of four each. The ship is larger than the other vessels recently launched by more than a hundred tons, and has an extra cannon in her armament.

Material From Brazil.

Ninety per cent of all materials used in the destroyer came originally from Brazil. It was built with the cooperation of U. S. experts and technicians.

Brazil's tremendous importance is stressed in U. S. and Pan-American plans for the defense of the Western Hemisphere. The proximity of her long coastline to enemy bases in West Africa makes Brazil the most vulnerable of all American nations. The country has many excellent

Brazil Rushes 'Defense Fleet'

As the destroyer Mariz e Barros is launched, Brazil forges a new link in its chain of floating steel fortresses it is rapidly constructing to defend it against aggressors. The Mariz e Barros is one of 11 warships launched in the last few months by this South American republic.

harbors and sites for naval bases which are being already strengthened against attack by warring Europe. And while the U. S. rushes construction of the chain of naval and oil bases to bridge the long ocean gap between the two Americas, Brazil's president is extending this "arm of steel" down the long coastline of South America.

Joint use of these naval bases to form a continuous All-American fortification against attack, is part of the Pan-American defense plans. U. S. "borrowed" naval and air bases in British Guiana, for example, are very close to those of northern Brazil, while Argentina's shorter coastline to the south is also being fortified. With the ABC nations of South America, Argentina, Brazil and Chile, all re-arming at high speed, the security of the Western Hemisphere is assured.

President Vargas, speaking at the launching of the Mariz e Barros, made a strong plea for "continental solidarity, and warned Brazilians that the moment called for preparedness in all phases of life, in order to cope with what the future might bring for the warring nations and for the Americas. "We understand that the present moment is pregnant with great apprehensions and uncertainties. The security and sovereignty of the Americas demand strict solidarity."

Expand Merchant Fleet.

Expansion of Brazil's merchant marine is also under way, as part of the defense program. While on his trip to the Amazon region, President Vargas visited the shipyards of Belem, where 27 ships are under construction and repair, including many new vessels. Old-fashioned wood-burning river boats long known on the Amazon river, are being rapidly replaced by the newer fuel-burning steamers to speed up transportation of supplies, trade and arms and fighting forces, in case of war.

Brazil has increased her army to 300,000 men, backed by a Brazilian armament industry which is fast being augmented by factories and industrial plants. Brazil's first airplane motor factory is now under construction, and two airplane factories already working at high speed are rushing completion on 100 war planes ordered by President Vargas for immediate defense. Brazil's first parachute factory opened this year. At present Brazil has two battle-ships, two flotilla leaders, four submarines, five destroyers, eight mine-layers, two mine-sweepers, six torpedo boats, and about 20 auxiliary ships. Air forces include about 215 planes, to which 100 more are being added as rapidly as possible.

Extensive war maneuvers in Brazil demonstrated the increased efficiency of all branches of her fighting forces. A sham battle in the Parahyba valley gave Brazil's armies, navy and air fleets a chance to "defend" southern Brazil from revolt or attack from the South, where large German populations are concentrated, as well as many Italians.

Recent visit of the military chiefs of Brazil and other Latin countries to the U. S. comprised an important step toward the unity of all American nations in defense of the Western Hemisphere. During the tour the U. S. gave visiting officers a preview of the military displays and spectacular war maneuvers, for the primary purpose of giving them a clear picture of the tremendous program for defense now under way.

Stress Air Defense.

Importance of air defense is also stressed in Brazil, following the plan of Pan-American defense. Brazil is watching closely developments of an "all plastic" plane, now under stiff experimental tests in the U. S., having in mind that future planes in Brazil may be made—at least in part—from coffee plastics, which are among the strongest and best plastics known. The plants for making the coffee plastic powder will be opened very soon, U. S. machinery is already being installed, ready for rapid development of the "cafe-life" industry, which may finally solve Brazil's defense needs also.

U. S.-built bombers are now being delivered by "mass flight" to Brazil, two groups of six planes each having arrived in Rio recently. The balance of 24 big bombing planes will be delivered as fast as completed in California airplane factories.

Possibility of a great U. S.-Brazilian dirigible line to be built by Goodyear, is also under discussion, and it is planned to establish the line of dirigibles between Miami and Rio, thus greatly strengthening continental air power. At the same time, the Condor, German sponsored air transport company, will delay its installation of a transatlantic service, as Brazil feels "the time is not opportune" for such an air service to be established.

Making a strong plea for continental solidarity, President Vargas said recently: "We all feel that, if it should be necessary, the American peoples—as during their struggles for independence—will unite their soldiers and their arms in the defense of their own sovereignty and of continental integrity."

U. S. Army Creates Real 'Boom Town'

FORT BRAGG, N. C.—In his sweetest dream probably no secretary of any Chamber of Commerce, however ardent a booster he might be, has visualized a 1,200 per cent increase in the population of his town during a single year. Yet that is what is being achieved here.

Although this post long has been the largest military reservation in the country (insofar as area is concerned), there were only a few more than 5,000 soldiers here last June. Next June, according to the army schedule, there will be 67,000 troops stationed at the post. But even that is not the whole story of the "boom" which has this section of the North Carolina sandhills busier than ever before.

Fort Bragg for years has been a sort of military suburb of the town of Fayetteville—population approximately 20,000. That was still true six months ago. But now the suburb has more than 22,000 troops plus approximately 24,000 workmen. Not only is the tail wagging the dog but it's growing and wagging faster every day.

"It's a madhouse," is the favorite description of Fort Bragg today. There are 2,478 buildings just completed or under construction (no official Bragg figure one day can be counted on the next). Soldiers are coming in by the thousands. The 24,000 workmen—to be exact, 23,546 one day last week—live in tourist camps and every available room for miles around. What is an undisturbed stretch of pinewoods one day will have a road through it the next. A week later a hundred or more buildings—each housing between 60 and 70 men—will be half finished.

Undoubtedly, it is a madhouse. But probably it is as efficient a madhouse as ever operated. The contractors and the army builders themselves are well ahead of schedule on their 2,478 new building program. The military police keep abreast of each day's developments to the point they can help old timers—stationed here for years—to find their way through the new roads and streets. And over in Fayetteville the soldiers on leave grin cheerfully as they stand in line waiting for a seat in a cafe—just as they stand in line for "chow" here on the post.

"Overage" destroyers raise question of keeping U. S. navy up to date . . . Guarded talk shows Ad-Administration holds ban on Japanese silk as reserve weapon.

(Bell Syndicate—WNU Service.)

WASHINGTON.—There has been so much talk about "overage" destroyers, and so much about the necessity of "capacity" to build as being more important than actual ships or planes, on the theory that the actual fighting craft might soon become obsolete, whereas the capacity to produce them would lend itself to improvements in construction, that a little study should be given, before the next armistice, to what course should be followed when the shooting stops.

The keels of 97 of these much talked about "overage" destroyers were laid AFTER the armistice of November, 1918! They cost the government $181,000,000.

Now everyone at the time, if anyone had stopped to think, knew that was a foolish thing for the government to do. Actually it was against the old practice of the navy department. It was only a few years before that happened that the navy had delayed awarding contracts for new battleships for several years in order to take every possible advantage of newest developments.

But the point here is that the naval officers responsible for this delay—the same men who permitted the laying of the keels of 97 unnecessary destroyers after November, 1918—knew perfectly well that the destroyers they were permitting to be built were headed for storage in grease, and nothing else.

RESTRICTED CONSTRUCTION

Their mere presence, in grease, in the years that followed prevented the navy from getting modern destroyers.

And notice that at the time all this post-war construction was rushed through, there was not the slightest notion that an arms conference was coming which would stop new construction and freeze navies at their existing strength. That did not come until the winter of 1921-22, though quite possibly the greatly added strength of the U. S. navy caused by this construction made other nations the more willing to stop the armament race.

But few naval officers have ever thought anything except that the arms conference was a disaster for America! Which again does not attribute wisdom to that feverish post-war construction.

So it is to be hoped that at the close of THIS war a more sane policy will prevail as to the use of the enormous capacity we will have on our hands for the construction of both ships and planes.

U. S. THREATENS SILK IMPORT BAN

The most significant thing in our foreign relations at present is not the nature of the repercussions from the menace to Germany and Italy in President Roosevelt's address to congress, but a much less publicized activity of the government regarding restricting or banning imports of silk from Japan.

Publicity about this is perhaps even more interesting than the threat itself. No one is shouting it from the housetops, but apparently every government official involved, from the White House down to the humblest clerk in the department of commerce, is under orders to say practically the same thing. That same thing is, boiled down, that there is no economic necessity for restricting or banning imports of silk at this time—that such an action would be purely POLITICAL.

In short, the administration wants Japan to know that this government has had the banning of silk imports under serious consideration; wants Japan to know that there is no economic reason why this should become a necessity, but that some POLITICAL motive might bring it about overnight!

If Japan should attack the Dutch East Indies, for example, that just MIGHT be the spark that would start the ban against silk imports.

'INFLUENCE' JAPAN

The hope of the administration, incidentally, is not to crush Japan economically, but to detach Japan, partly by blandishments but mostly by threats, from the Nazi-Fascist group.

Which brings us down to the question of just how seriously the sudden stoppage of silk shipments to the United States would affect Japan. From the ordinary business standpoint, the blow would be terrific. Japan's sales of silk to this country are far and away her best source of the exchange she needs so badly to pay for imports she must make.

But, once the step were taken, the United States would lose its chief weapon for keeping Japan in line. Japan then would have nothing more to suffer from any further economic step by the United States.

Suggestions For Treating Cold in Head

By DR. JAMES W. BARTON

WHEN a cold in the head occurs, the first thought in the mind of many is to take a purgative and then begin to use a salt or oil solution up into the nose. Nose, throat and lung specialists advise that this very "active" treatment of a cold is unwise and that rest in bed and leaving the nose and throat alone would give better results.

Some valuable information about the treatment of colds and infections of nose, throat and sinuses is given by Dr. Arlie V. Bock in Annals of Internal Medicine. Dr. Bock tells of the care of 1,667 patients with the above infections treated at Stillman infirmary, Harvard university, from September, 1935, to March, 1938. The patients were students and recent graduates, age range being 17 to 25.

The first thought in the treatment, whether or not the patient has a temperature, is putting the patient to bed. It is because many of these patients are tired mentally and physically that the cold attacks them. Getting off their feet and getting rested saves or preserves the body's energies, particularly the reserve power of the heart.

Go Easy on Sprays.

The second point made by Dr. Bock is that too active spraying, inhaling, gargling of medicines produces irritation of the lining of the nose, throat and sinuses and so prolongs the course of the infection.

The third point is the use of quieting drugs for comfort. Laxatives are not usually prescribed.

By these simple measures—rest in bed and quieting drugs—complications were prevented and the patients made good recoveries.

Some suggestions and findings of Dr. Bock and his associates who treated these cases are, (a) that nose and throat infections would be less common if patients could be taught to live within their physical powers or resources, (b) while weather changes and contagion must be taken into account, tension is an important factor in bringing on attacks, (c) when attack does come, keep off the feet and don't use sprays, injections into nose, or gargles too often or too vigorously.

What to Do for Acne (Pimples)

IN ONE of my classes at high school was a boy of 15 whose face was covered with unsightly blackheads and pimples. Naturally he was much ashamed and believed that the rest of the boys thought that he didn't wash his face properly or often enough. My own opinion at that time was that he didn't play baseball, football or take any exercise and that this lack of exercise was the cause of his pimples and blackheads—because his circulation was poor. It was a few years afterward that I learned that most cases of acne—pimples—were due to gland disturbances at the age of puberty in both boys and girls.

One of the most complete reviews of the "possible" causes of acne is given in the Medical World by Drs. Oscar L. Levin and Howard T. Behrman, New York city. They name the various causes of the past and present such as pus organisms getting into the skin, various occupations which affect the skin by blocking the openings of the oil and sweat glands, chemicals which affect the texture of the skin causing it to lose some of its elasticity, dandruff of the scalp extending to face and shoulders, and gland disturbances occurring at and for some years after puberty. These physicians state that any of the above may cause or be a partial cause of acne, but that the most important single cause is an improper adjustment or imbalance of the glands.

Various forms of treatment are outlined which include cutting down on starches and sugars, eating more fruits and vegetables; keeping the intestine active; the use of vaccines, and the use of gland substances.

Treatment of the skin itself includes use of good soap and water many times daily in very greasy skins, applying hot cloths and then removing the blackheads, opening up of pimples containing pus, and X-ray treatments.

QUESTION BOX

Q.—Could you tell me how many units of synthetic vitamins the body will assimilate?

A.—Amount of synthetic vitamins body will assimilate depends upon the body weight and the tissues of the individual. These are the controlling factors in all cases. However, vitamins are prescribed in international units and the physician looking after you will give the dosage suitable for your particular requirements.

Traffic Courts Need More Dignity, According to Judge

Adoption of the elaborate regalia and the pomp and dignity of English law in our traffic courts would materially decrease America's huge auto death toll by impressing violators with the importance of the traffic laws and the seriousness of their violation, suggests Judge Harry H. Porter of the Municipal court of Evanston, Ill., in an article in a recent issue of Northwestern university's Journal of Criminal Law and Criminology.

"I have always maintained that the proper time to teach a defendant respect for the traffic laws is the first time he appears in court," states this jurist. "If he is duly impressed with the majesty of the law at this time you have gone a long way to cut him from the ranks of the repeaters. The dignity of the court should have a psychological effect on the offender calculated to accomplish fully as much as the actual passing of sentence."

Daniels spoke without preamble. "You were down at the other end of the mill yesterday, Wills. Did you see anyone fooling around the big vats—the digesters? We lost a batch of pulp through some funny business or other."

"I don't know all the men in the mill as yet," Wills said. "And I was out for two or three hours. The vats have padlocks, don't they?"

"That's it," Daniels frowned. "It's an inside job, evidently—without even a motive that we can discover. You haven't made any of these fellows sore, have you?"

Wills looked puzzled. "How could I? I've only been watching and listening. And if I made a man sore he'd be more likely to give me a poke in the jaw, wouldn't he, than to ruin a run of pulp?"

"It sounds reasonable. It's a mystery—and not so good for me because I carry the keys. Well, much obliged."

At shouted instructions from a lank man in overalls, Wills went to help smooth the thick blanket into place on the bed of the machine. But the odd unease of being pressed upon by strange and unfriendly forces persisted. He hated the feeling of defensiveness, of needing to justify himself in his own mind.

He liked this job, and he had been swept up into admiration for the intrepid spirit of Virgie Morgan.

And now, as the mill clamor beat around him, he was certain that it was the remoteness, the indifference in her eyes that made this feeling of being on trial without a friend in court. He had to show her. He had to show her that he was something other than a lost and rather pathetic young man whom a big-hearted elderly woman had befriended.

A sudden sharp nausea caught him as his mind raced. Young men had been befriended by middle-aged women before—if she thought he was that sort, an opportunist, a heel! He gave an involuntary jerk and Bud Spain yelled, "Hey!" But the yell was lost in other yells, rough and sudden and startling.

Frank Emmet banged the gears of the Jordan machine back, jumped and ran. Wills ran, too, and because the others were yelling, he yelled, too. Hobe Anderson was dragging a flat hose off a reel. Another man struggled with a fire extinguisher.

The smoke was pouring from a little oil house, built against the north wall of the mill. They kicked the door in, there were yells and men running into each other, and much coughing and hissing of chemicals. The smoke grew blacker, then turned white and sank to the ground. Wills' eyes were running scalding water but it was he who kicked the smoldering barrel into the open, where Hobe Anderson knocked it over and sent it rolling with a stream from the hose.

"Take it easy!" Wills shouted at Hobe. "Cut that water off. Let's have a look at this."

A dozen hands jerked the charred, smoking staves of the barrel apart. A label, still intact, on its side, indicated that it had held bisulphide. In the bottom an oily mass still smoked acridly. Dragged out, it flared into flame briefly—a soaked, dangerous bundle of cotton rags and paper. Men stamped out the flame, looked at each other somberly.

"Somebody," announced Frank Emmet, "was fixing to burn the mill."

"Wind's wrong," Hobe said, kicking a smoking heap into a pool of water, "or she'd have went sure. Looks like if anybody wanted to burn her they'd have figured on the wind."

Wills was aware of Lucy Fields' white face near to his elbow. "It was set, wasn't it?" she said. "Obviously. Though, even if the barrel had burned, there might not have been serious damage. That little building is more or less airtight. The fire probably would have smoldered out."

"But why would anyone want to set fire to the mill? The town would be ruined if it was destroyed."

"Why," Daniels cut in, "would anyone want to spoil the pulp? Something's wrong somewhere. Where is Mrs. Morgan?"

"She went to Asheville to see Tom Pruitt's lawyers. I'd better telephone her."

"I wouldn't," Wills said. "The fire is out. Why worry her? She has troubles enough already."

"That's true. I won't tell her. You'd better clean this up, Frank."

"Let's have a look at it first," Wills looked at Daniels. "We can find out perhaps where this stuff came from."

For an instant Wills sensed an edge of hesitation in Daniels' manner. His eyes flicked around, then were as quickly guarded. But his voice was carefully casual when he answered, "Not much left—but there may be a clue."

Wills went back to his work at the Jordan machine. It was an hour later that one of the Spain boys came to him and said, "Lucy wants to see you. In the office."

Wills crossed the yard to the little structure that stood so bleakly alone. Lucy Fields sat at her little desk, and her face went first red and then white as Wills came in.

"Sit down, please," she faltered a little, then plunged rapidly. "Mr. Wills, I'm doing a very bold thing—asking you to come here. But I had to talk to you. There's—nothing else to do."

"I see. And what was it you wanted to say to me?" He took the chair opposite—the chair that still bore the imprints of David Morgan's shoulder-blades.

Her throat fluttered. A strained look came over her small wistful face.

"This is such a little town," she began. "It's rather awful to live in such a gossip little place. It isn't easy—what I have to say—to make it clear, I mean. About the town. About the mill. It belongs to the town—to all of us, Mr. Wills. The men who work here have been here always. Nobody ever came in from outside till Mr. Daniels came last year."

"What is it you're trying to tell me?" Wills asked bluntly. "That I'm an outsider? That somehow or other I am to blame for the trouble in the mill?"

"And so your suggestion is that I leave town in haste and never come back!"

Tears ran down her pale face. "I know I sound like a fool to you,

Her face went red and then white as Wills came in.

but Mrs. Morgan has been a mother to me—to all of us. We've all fought and worked and struggled together—always for the mill."

"All but the fellow who poured oil on the newspapers and ruined the pulp. He was fighting for himself."

"Perhaps he thought he was fighting for the mill. Perhaps he thought that outsiders would be coming in to take it away from us. He might have thought that you were the first."

"It sounds fantastic. But it may be true. I'll talk to Mrs. Morgan—and you can be sure I won't let the mill be destroyed on my account."

"Oh—please don't talk to Mrs. Morgan! Please—just go! You can make some excuse—you had a job, you can say you are going back to it. You could say you had changed your mind."

"I'm sorry—I couldn't leave without talking to Mrs. Morgan. I'm very much indebted to her."

"I appealed to you," she sighed. "It's all I can do. But—if you were convinced—"

"You've done your part. Whatever happens—I'm to blame."

"I hope nothing happens. I hope I'm wrong," she smiled thinly.

But there was a dubious uneasiness in her heart, as Wills went away. Had Stanley Daniels been a little odd—a trifle curt and watchful? He couldn't know anything about this affair—and yet, he alone carried the keys.

Lucy was heavily unhappy as she walked home alone that night. Life could be so hopeless, so ghastly when you lived in a shabby old house at the end of a shabby street. When you were so achingly in love!

CHAPTER XI

Marian Morgan had driven her little car up a twisting stretch of ridge road, without having any very definite idea of where she was going or why.

She drove slowly because she told herself that it was thrifty to spare tires on a rocky, boulder-edged track. She searched the hills above and below with her eyes, but not even to herself would she admit that she looked for anything. She had heard her mother telephoning instructions that morning, but she had kept her mind sternly on her breakfast grapefruit and adjured herself not to listen. What did it matter where the woods truck went or who went with it?

She slipped out of the car, dragged the cushion out and rummaged for the pump, set it up on the ground. With a nail-file from her purse she pressed down the valve of a front tire, let the air escape until the tire sagged, loose and flabby, a discouraging flummox of limp rubber. Then she climbed back into the car, wrapped the rug around her knees and sat in a small, cold huddle waiting.

Instantly, now that the thing was done, a hundred accusing and condemning voices clamored in her ears. She was being cheap, she was doing the sort of shallow trick that a girl of Lottie's class might devise, she was forgetting that she was the daughter of Virgie Morgan of the Morgan mills. But drawing out all these self-reproaches was the thin, poignant cry that had trembled through her heart and beat in her blood since the night she had talked to her mother before the fire.

"I have to know!" she said, plaintively, aloud. "I know it isn't true—but I have to be sure!"

This contradictory patching up of her conscience helped her to be calm, to wait, though her feet tingled with cold. A mountain jay came and shrieked at her from a sumac clump. A deer stood for an instant, tense and listening under some gnarled ancient apple-trees beside the ruin of a stone chimney. Then suddenly he bounded away. There was a metallic vibration through the woods. The truck was starting. She caught the backfire of a cold engine and the clank of shovels tossed aboard, and leaned her elbow on the button of her horn.

The blare made the jays and the little pine sparrows and crossbills scatter with a whirring and snapping of twigs.

Then the rusty radiator appeared over the rise emitting steam. Joe had let the engine run hot on the grade. He was always doing that, too impatient to cool it out properly when they reached the top of a long climb.

Two men jumped down when they saw Marian's car, and came running. One was Joe. The other was Branford Wills. Swiftly Marian put every scruple out of her mind. She was a woman, using a woman's devious and often unfair weapons.

She said, "I'm stuck. That miserable old tire insists on going flat. And I left the key to the spare in my other purse. Isn't mother with you? I thought she came up here. There's a long-distance call for her—I came up to tell her."

"She didn't come with us. She must be at the mill," Wills said. "Let's have a look at that tire."

"It's flat, all right," Joe gave the wheel a kick. "But there's still a little air in it. Maybe we can pump it up so you can get down to the road."

They pumped up the tire, and Joe studied it, testing the valve. "Must be a pressure leak," he said. "Valve's all right. Can you turn around here without getting stuck?"

"I think so—I'll try," Joe said to Wills. "It's steep off there. She could turn over easy."

Marian slid along meekly. "I'm a lot of trouble," she said in a voice which would have amazed her mother, so humble was it.

"No trouble," Wills whipped the steering-wheel about. "This is a bad place to turn. Flag for me, Joe," he shouted.

"O. K. Cut deep," Joe semaphored his arms.

The car came about. Wills got out again to look at the tire. "Standing up all right," he announced. "You'll make it."

Marian's throat cramped. But she fought its quivering, got the words out.

"Would you drive it down for me? The tire might go down again and I'm not much good at the pump."

"Of course." He resumed the wheel again, while Joe followed with the truck. "You shouldn't be driving on lonely mountain roads alone, you know," he said, as they bumped over a wooden bridge.

"No one would hurt me," she declared. "Everybody for miles around knows me—knows mother. And mother hasn't any enemies."

"She has one, obviously," Wills said. "The fellow who kindled a fire in the oil house at the mill yesterday wasn't celebrating the Fourth of July. He was getting even."

Marian looked thoughtful. "Perhaps that wasn't mother's enemy."

"That might be true," he drove the little car carefully around a slippery hair-pin turn. "But even without enemies there are dangers. This morning, for instance. Suppose you had had to walk back to the highway? Suppose the truck had not been on the ridge?"

"I knew the truck was on the ridge," Marian was truthful.

"That's why I came. Does this catechism and fatherly admonition have to go on indefinitely? We could talk about other things. I'm fairly intelligent. I know all the tenses and that you shouldn't say ain't."

"I'd better take another look at that tire," Wills stopped on a wide bit of road, waved the truck past. It roared down grade, flinging mud cheerfully.

Marian sat, looking straight ahead, her cameo profile a trifle grim, her chin squared.

"There's nothing the matter with the tire," she said. "I wanted to talk to you."

He looked at her quickly, searchingly. She was so near—and so dear! Even with her chin set at a resolute angle, even with her eyes cool and distant and her lashes evasive. He made an impulsive move, then drew back as her aloof manner did not change.

"I'm listening," he said quietly.

She twisted her fingers together, but kept her eyes straight ahead—on the thickets where the jays quivered and the frozen slopes where icicles made a diamond passemeterie on every rock and twig.

"I don't like fighting," she began with a little difficulty. "We seem to clash. And it's rather silly, don't you think?"

"Very silly. Especially when—" "Especially when we could arrange things sensibly. I—this isn't easy for me to say. But—I thought if I talked to you—alone—if I appealed to you—"

He stiffened a little. Only the day before Lucy Fields had used those same words. "I've appealed to you!" For a moment eagerness, tenderness had rushed through his blood like flame. He had looked at Marian and seen only her young sweetness, the golden curve of her throat where kisses were born to lie, the yielding curve of her lips.

But now the pride in him, that verged so close to a high, fine fury, the terrible, blind, masculine pride, that through a thousand centuries has gone flaunting banners and waving swords and trampling small tender things underfoot, had lum again.

He could not see the pulse that quivered where a gold shadow lay upon her throat, he did not see the uncertainty of her fingers and her eyelids quivering. He saw only her profile, set against him, the chin that was like David Morgan's. He was blind and savage with hurt and frozen with disappointment. He was a very stupid young man.

He drew back and swung the car wide on a curve, not looking at her. "I think I know what you're going to say. I've heard it all, already. I only have one answer. I'm not leaving town. I'm not leaving the mill. I'm not going to be driven out—nor wheeled out. I'm in this to stay. So—it's too bad you went to so much trouble to let the air out of that tire!"

She turned, as though she had been struck, but he did not see. Her face was as white and stiff as his own. Her voice snickered like steel on ice.

"You're a very famous egotist, aren't you?" she said, brutally. "You couldn't possibly think beyond yourself for a moment. It wouldn't occur to you that I might not want to talk about the mill. That I might be thinking of myself a little. I won't say it now. I won't let you gloat over the kind of a fool that I was. I see—how hopeless it is!"

She choked a little, then recovered her control, gave a savage drag at the brake, turned the key.

Wills said, "Marian! Good God!" But she was not listening. Her eyes were black and blazing. She reached across his knees as the car lurched to a stop, and opened the door.

"Get out, will you?" she said hoarsely. "I can't stand any more."

He said "Marian!" again, in a husky, stricken voice, but she was like a woman on fire.

"Get out! I hate you! Get out!" She snatched at the wheel, whirled away with frosty mud flying, almost before he was on the ground. Down the winding road she swung past the truck, grazing a hemlock tree, careening on two wheels.

"You'd better wait for him," she shouted at the startled Joe. "He isn't riding with me."

Down the mountain she tore blindly, shame and a white, torturing pain burning her. Once she laughed and the laugh was bitter.

So—he was in love with her, was he? She was a song sung to a gipsy tambourine.

Cheap—cheap—to have surrendered even a little! She hated him! She hated him!

As for Branford Wills, he sat morosely in the jolting truck and hated himself for a blundering fool.

Now—with his crass stupidity he had ruined what life with its ruthless distinctions had not made intolerable before.

At the mill gate the truck halted. "Something's busted again," announced Joe grimly.

Somehow, the spur track had been undermined. A car, heavily loaded with pulp, had gone off the rails, swung sideways, and turned over, tearing up a hundred yards of track.

"This here," declared Joe, "is gittin' so it ain't even funny!"

CHRIST'S CONCERN
FOR THE LOSTLESSON TEXT—Luke 15:1-10.
GOLDEN TEXT—The Son of man is come to seek and to save that which was lost.—Luke 19:10.

Lost! What fear and disquietude grips our hearts when we hear that word! A little boy strays away into the forest, and the whole countryside gives up its work to go and seek him. An airship fails to reach its destination, and hundreds of ships go to seek after it, while an entire nation waits in suspense. A ship is lost at sea, and the whole world grieves.

But listen! It is only when applied to the spiritual life that the word "lost" finds its real depth of meaning. To be "without God in the world" (Eph. 2:12) and without hope—that is to really be lost. Yet parents who would not rest a moment while their child was physically lost go on without concern over his spiritual condition.

Our Lord had no such unconcern. He was deeply moved over the lost condition of men; He came "to seek and to save that which was lost." The two parables of our lesson teach us three truths.

I. Lost and Lamented (vv. 1-4, 8).

The publicans and sinners recognized their need of a Saviour and He, knowing their lost condition, received them, much to the disgust of the Pharisees and scribes who felt no need to be saved. They have their descendants in our churches today.

The good shepherd cannot rest while one of the sheep is lost. Though "there were ninety and nine that safely lay in the shelter of the fold," he sought the lost one. His grief-stricken heart compelled him to go out into the night to find him.

One wonders how we who profess to follow Christ, the Good Shepherd, can be so complacent about the lost. What if we do have the ninety and nine in church—where is the lost one? Even if we do have a large Sunday School class—where are the boys and girls who are lost? Do our hearts grieve over them? If so, we will go and seek them. We who would quickly join the woman in seeking for her coin—will we join our Saviour in seeking the lost?

II. Sought by Sacrifice (vv. 4, 8).

The woman laid aside her usual duties and the pleasures of life to seek her coin. The shepherd left the warmth, the comfort, and the rest which he had earned to go out into the wilderness to seek his sheep.

"But none of the ransomed ever knew

How deep were the waters crossed;
Nor how dark was the night that the Lord passed through

Ere He found His sheep that was lost."

Soul-winning calls for sacrifice. If the love of Christ constrains us, we will do it gladly, but if the self-seeking, comfort-loving spirit of this age controls our lives, we will always find some excuse (not a reason, but an excuse).

III. Restored With Rejoicing (vv. 5-7, 9, 10).

The lost coin back in the owner's hand brought joy to her and her neighbors. The shepherd calls in friends and neighbors to rejoice over the restored sheep. How intensely human that is, and how altogether appropriate.

The great truth, however, is found in verses 7 and 10, where we learn that the repentance of one sinner sets even the bells of heaven ringing as the angels of God rejoice.

How long is it, my Christian friend, since you caused such joy by permitting yourself to be used of God in winning a soul? Yes, I know that it is God who seeks, but He uses human beings as His messengers, as His seekers. That is our first business after we ourselves have been saved.

Our lesson will not be complete unless we consider the rest of the chapter—the parable of the prodigal son. In its main points it is like the other two parables, but there is this vital difference—the shepherd sought his sheep, the woman searched for her coin—the father did not seek the son; the son sought the father.

Some prodigal, far from the house of his heavenly Father, may read these lines and say, "I wish someone would seek me out and bring me to God." But, my friend, you need not wait for anyone. Do as the prodigal did—"arise and go" to God. He is waiting for you; His love has never faltered; He wants you to come now. Make His heart rejoice, and set the choirs of heaven singing, by coming to Him by faith—just now.

As Ye Go, Preach

And as ye go, preach, saying, The kingdom of heaven is at hand. Heal the sick, cleanse the lepers, raise the dead, cast out devils; freely ye have received, freely give.—Matthew X, 7-8.

Remember—your telephone works both ways

You use the telephone so often to call some one else that you may not realize how often others use it to call you. Actually, much of the value to you in "having a telephone" lies in those incoming calls. Surveys show that many families receive more calls than they make.

REMEMBER? ... last night the Browns telephoned—so you're going over there tonight for bridge ... then Betty's friend called to straighten out a school assignment ... and Aunt Helen talked to you from Ohio to say Uncle Jack is much better ... and a neighbor rang up to discuss plans for the next club meeting. All incoming calls—and all important!

When you stop to figure how much your telephone helps to make life more pleasant, add the calls you receive to those you make—to get a full appreciation of its value.

It is the constant aim of your company to provide the finest possible telephone service at the lowest possible cost to you. ... Illinois Bell Telephone Company.

A Timely and Interesting Article

The following timely contribution was sent in by a reader of The News-Bulletin:

It has apparently happened gradually thru the years that we American people have taken too much for granted; the kind of a country in which we live. Too little have we realized all that it should mean to us. Now, as never before in our history, have such words as democracy, liberty, freedom (and even our flag which is a symbol of all these) taken on a new meaning. We need to remind not only our youth but adults as well, over and over again the significance of it all, even at the cost of seeming trite. We need to remember that this piece of cloth we call the American Flag is: My flag and your flag the Red and White and Blue. The flag of all Americans, United, brave and true.

This banner proudly borne aloft, Is the heritage of us all, The symbol of Democracy, And those who've heard its call.

It gives to men the right to live As free men in our land, Beneath the glorious Stars and Stripes, We proudly take our stand.

It stands for what the Founders did, And for the laws they made, For courage, sacrifice and love, Foundations which they laid.

And we who follow after, Must keep this banner bright, Unsullied, pure and ever clear, Upholding truth and right.

Your flag, and my flag, We give allegiance to, The Stars and Stripes forever, The Red and White and Blue.

And so let us remember this when we "pledge allegiance to the flag of the United States of America, and to the Republic for which it stands, one nation indivisible, with liberty and justice for all."

Young Farmers Take Short Course At Bloom

The annual part-time school for young farmers which meets each Monday evening thruout the winter months is now in full swing at Bloom high school in Chicago Heights. Fifteen young farm men enrolled in the work. The first three meetings of the year were spent in the study of concrete mixing for long life and service.

The young men are now studying various types of farm mechanics training which each has chosen for himself. More and more farmers in Illinois each year are adding a well equipped shop to their farming businesses and these young men are taking special training in this work. At present four are doing electric wiring for farm buildings, three are learning to operate the forge and to do blacksmithing work, three are working on mechanical drawing, three are working on tin work and soldering and two are working on gasoline engines.

It would require a great many meetings to complete all of the work taught in the shop department at Bloom, but by coming once a week for several winters a very thorough understanding of most repair and building work can be obtained by these young farmers.

Mr. E. W. Rowley is in charge of the program and he invites any other young farm men between the ages of 18 and 30 from the area within 15 miles of Chicago Heights to come to Bloom for this special winter training.

The meetings are scheduled from 8:00 until 9:30 on Monday evenings and will continue thruout January, February and March.

Henry Heideman, Harvey, who retires from the office of President after serving for two years, reported that at the end of 1940, Potawatomi Trails Council had a total of 983 Scouts and 356 Cubs in its 3 districts, Indian Trail which includes Bremen, Orland, Frankfort and Green Garden Townships; Vincennes Trail which includes all of Thornton Township and Saulk Trail which includes Bloom and Rich Townships in Cook County and Crete, Monee, Will, Washington and Peotone Townships in Will County.

Those who attended from this territory were: C. Adams, C. Schultz of Oak Forest; V. Tolen, Tinley Park; F. Needham, C. S. Nebeker, E. McGovney, Mokena; E. Fairbank, A. Trenning, J. Wiseman of Forest Ridge; A. Kohls, G. Miller of Midlothian; J. Patton and Al. Levering of Steger; Harold G. Boltz, Scout Executive and Leo Sullivan, Field Executive.

JOHN CLAY CO. WEEKLY REPORT

Hog prices fluctuated widely last week, but wound up the period sharply higher than a week earlier. Cattle and lambs too, improved their position last week. Early this week hogs registered another nice advance and prime steers moved on to a new three-year high basis, but medium cattle were under pressure. Lambs did not change.

All classes of live stock and dressed meat prices are appreciably higher than last December's low time and also materially better than the corresponding period last year. Steers are selling best for a January in 11 years. Hogs, highest for the month since 1938; lambs best for the period in four years. Compared with the corresponding time last year steers are up 25 per cent; hogs, 47 per cent; lambs, 16 per cent. In the dressed meat line, beef ranges from 10 to 42 per cent above a year earlier; pork, 40 to 65 per cent up; lamb, unevenly five to 30 per cent over that time.

Little protest is heard from the consumer about the price advances registered by dressed meats. The main reason for the complacency in the face of rising costs is the fact that employment is steadily increasing, and when the people have jobs and money they are not apt to complain about food prices.

MID-WINTER MENUS

(See Recipes Below)

You may have a mental filing system for your menus, or you may jot down your meal ideas and slip them into a recipe box. Either way, the chances are that mid-winter finds you in the market for some fresh and workable ideas for what to feed the family.

First and foremost, you will want your winter menus to be warming and heartening. The calorie content may be a little higher because more energy is needed to supply heat and because the cold stimulates us to more activity. Vitamin suppliers need to be carefully watched. With your garden adrift with snow, not so many fresh vegetables and fruits will find their way to your table without a special effort on your part.

Even if fresh peas, green beans and vine-ripened tomatoes are out of reach, almost any market boasts whole bins filled with apples, sweet potatoes, cabbage and carrots—all of them potent sources of vitamins. Plenty of grapefruit, oranges and tomato juice will help to replace the fresh tomatoes.

But now for the menus! Two are dinners—one built around a fragrant, red-brown dish of Hungarian goulash served with plenty of hot buttered noodles; the other, sausages baked under a covering of Yorkshire pudding. The third meal is a hot soup luncheon.

Hungarian Goulash
Buttered Noodles
Salad Bowl
(spinach, carrot, raw cauliflower)
Brazil Nut Cherry Pie
Coffee Milk
Yorkshire Sausages
Canned Green Beans with
Mustard Butter Sauce
Whole Carrots
Red Cabbage Salad
Honey Spice Cake
Coffee Milk

Tomato Chicken Soup
Swiss Cheese Sandwiches
Grapefruit and Apple Salad
Frosted Ginger Bars
Tea Milk
Red Cabbage Salad.
(Serves 5 to 6)

2 cups red cabbage (shredded fine)
3 tart, red cooking apples (unpeeled) (diced)
1 cup grated carrot
4 tablespoons brown sugar
3 tablespoons vinegar
2 tablespoons French dressing (prepared)

Buy a small, solid young head of red cabbage, one with thin, tender leaves. Remove core, and shred very fine. Place shredded cabbage in ice water for 30 minutes to crisp it. Combine cabbage, diced apple and grated carrot. Mix brown sugar, vinegar and French dressing and pour over salad. Toss lightly, until dressing is thoroughly mixed with salad.

Hungarian Goulash
(Serves 4 to 5)
1½ pounds beef round (cubed)
3 tablespoons fat
3 beef bouillon cubes
3 cups hot water
½ clove garlic
½ bay leaf
½ teaspoon salt
Few grains cayenne pepper
2 cups cubed potatoes
1½ tablespoons butter
1½ tablespoons flour
1 tablespoon paprika
1 cup canned tomatoes (sieved)
Have beef cut in 1½-inch cubes. Brown on all sides in hot fat, then add bouillon cubes dissolved in hot water. Add garlic, bay leaf, salt and cayenne pepper and simmer the mixture for 2 hours. Remove garlic and bay leaf, and add potatoes cut in ½-inch cubes. Cook 30 minutes, then remove ¼ cup of broth from pan and cool. Combine with melted butter, flour, and paprika and blend into a smooth paste. Add to goulash, stirring constantly; cook until thick, about 5 minutes. Add sieved tomato and cook 10 more minutes.

Brazil Nut Cherry Pie.
(Makes 1 9-inch pie)
2½ cups sour, red cherries (canned)
1 cup cherry juice
3 tablespoons cornstarch
1 cup sugar
1 tablespoon butter
½ cup sliced Brazil nuts

Drain cherries, and set aside the juice. Blend cornstarch and sugar in a saucepan; add cherry juice. Place over heat and cook, stirring constantly until thickened, about 3 minutes. Remove from the heat, add drained cherries, butter and Brazil nuts. Pour the filling into a 9-inch pie plate lined with pastry. Moisten the edge of the pie with cold water; arrange lattice of pastry strips across pie. Press down rim with fork. Bake in hot oven (450 degrees Fahrenheit) 15 minutes, then in moderate oven (350 degrees Fahrenheit) for 30 minutes.

Honey Spice Cake.
3 cups sifted cake flour
3 teaspoons baking powder
½ teaspoon salt
½ teaspoon soda
1½ teaspoons cinnamon
½ teaspoon nutmeg
¾ cup butter or other shortening
½ cup sugar
¾ cup strained honey
2 egg yolks, well beaten
½ cup chopped nut meats
1 teaspoon vanilla
¾ cup water
2 egg whites (stiffly beaten)

Sift cake flour once, add baking powder, salt, soda, and spices and sift together three times. Cream butter thoroughly, add sugar, and cream together until light and fluffy. Add honey gradually. Beat after each addition. Add egg yolks, nuts, and vanilla; beat well. Add flour, alternately with water, a small amount at a time. Beat after each addition until smooth. Fold in stiffly beaten egg whites. Bake in a paper-lined greased loaf pan (9 by 13 by 2 inches) in moderate oven (350 degrees) for 50 minutes.

Tomato Chicken Soup.
(Serves 6)
2 tablespoons onion (finely chopped)
1 tablespoon butter

2 No. 1 cans condensed chicken soup
1 No. 1 can condensed tomato soup
1½ cups water
1½ cup light cream or milk

¼ teaspoon salt
½ teaspoon white pepper
Saute onion in butter until yellow and transparent. Add chicken soup, tomato soup, water, milk, salt and white pepper. Stir thoroughly and heat to serving temperature.

Apricot Sweet Potatoes.
(Serves 6)
6 medium-sized sweet potatoes
½ pound dried apricots
¾ cup water
¾ cup sugar
½ teaspoon salt

Peel sweet potatoes and cook in boiling salted water (1 teaspoon per quart) until tender, about 35 minutes. Mash with a potato masher. Cover apricots with water and let soak for 30 minutes. Then simmer until tender, about 25 minutes. Mash the fruit to a pulp and add sugar and salt. Whip apricot pulp with sweet potatoes until very well blended. Serve very hot. Apricot sweet potatoes are especially good with ham and broccoli.

DISGUISE

By R. H. WILKINSON

(Associated Newspapers.)
WNU Service.

"THE trouble," said Toby Stark, "with your modern criminal is his lack of confidence in himself. The fact that he is forever afraid of being detected, the fact that he usually works under cover of darkness—a time when burglars are expected to work—all combine to bring about his apprehension by men who can work in the open."

Toby paused and lighted a cigarette. A half dozen of us were grouped on the veranda of the Ridgeley Club and for a moment after Toby finished talking there was a silence. Toby is inclined to be loquacious and at times extremely boring. There are few subjects on which he can't talk knowingly and, much to our regret, lengthily.

"You talk like an experienced hand at the game," said Lloyd Barnard presently, and grinned.

Toby laughed. "I'd like to wager I could pull off a crime and get away with it. Employing my own methods, too."

Lloyd puffed at his pipe. "Why not? I'll take your wager."

Toby slapped his knee. "Done! I have twenty-five dollars that says I can break into a house in broad daylight, fill a traveling bag with silver, and get away with it."

Watching Lloyd closely I distinctly saw a twinkle come into his eyes and immediately disappear again. He said, "Twenty-five suits me, Toby. But suppose you get caught?"

"I won't. But in case there's a slip-up, you boys will have to fix it up with the police. I'll tell you what. Leo Chapman is up in the mountains this week and with his family. His place on the drive is empty. That's the house I can break into."

Again Lloyd's eyes twinkled, and I knew a feeling of excitement. Unless the signs lied, Lloyd had in mind some sort of plan whereby Toby was to get a jolt.

Toby was in jail, getting his jolt, and none of us were very sorry.

A moment later my excitement subsided. Toby had also seen the twinkle in Lloyd's eyes. "O. K.," he grinned. "I know you live out that way Lloyd, and you can fix it up with the cop on the beat if you like. Only in that case, I'll collect the twenty-five."

"There'll be no fixing," said Lloyd. And Toby nodded.

One or two of the group who had listened in on the conversation were a little doubtful. In the first place, they didn't think Leo Chapman would like the idea, and, in the second place, they thought we'd have a pretty hard time explaining the situation to the police in case Toby were caught.

But Toby was adamant. In fact, he was so cocksure of being able to commit his crime and getting away with it, that we all agreed to let him try, hoping secretly that he'd get caught and taught a lesson.

The day set for Toby's attempt at crime was Sunday. We all agreed to stay away from the Chapman place, giving him a clear field to work in. When the Chapmans got home we would accompany Toby to their house, make sure he had actually stolen some of their property and witness the payment of the wager.

At seven o'clock that Sunday night Lloyd Barnard dropped into the club and found four of the half dozen of us who were in on the plan taking together. Barnard was grinning.

"Well, I win the bet. Toby didn't get away with it."

"Didn't get away with it! What happened? Where is he now?"

"Rivers, the cop on the beat, met him as he came out of Leo's front door. Toby's down at headquarters."

Earl Colby leaped to his feet. "Good heavens! We'd better go down and get him out. This thing has gone far enough!"

Lloyd sat down and pulled out his pipe. "Go ahead if you want to, but it won't do any good. Toby, I'm afraid is in for a good long stay. And I'm inclined to think this will take some of the conceit out of him."

Early, who had had little taste for this business in the first place, displayed no little alarm. "But look here, Lloyd, that isn't playing the game quite fairly. You agreed to fix it up with the police, you know."

Lloyd seemed not at all put out. "Sure, I agreed to fix it up, and I tried. I just came from there, but they wouldn't believe me. There's another factor entered the case."

"Another factor! Good heavens, Lloyd, tell us what's happened!"

Lloyd lighted his pipe and smiled pleasantly. "Well, to begin with, Toby did a pretty good job, according to his own telling and according to Rivers, the cop. About three o'clock this afternoon Toby drove up in front of Leo's place as smart as you please, took a traveling bag from the rumble seat of his car and strode up the walk. Acting quite as if he owned the place he removed a bunch of keys from his pocket—skeletons, of course—unlocked the front door and stepped inside."

"Rivers saw him do this and didn't get the least bit suspicious. Rivers told me about it himself. What happened after Toby got inside the house was told me by the culprit through the bars of his cell."

Lloyd paused and chuckled. "After Toby got inside the house," he went on, "he put a pair of gloves on, and fitted a mask to his face. The mask was just a precaution in case Leo had left any servants in the house, and because he liked the idea of wearing one."

"However, the mask proved unnecessary. The house was empty. Toby filled his traveling bag un-molested. And a half hour later he stepped through the front door, first wiping off the knob and removing his gloves and swung jauntily down the walk again, whistling merrily."

"At this very moment Rivers rounded a corner on his return trip, espied Toby coming down the walk and waited for him at the gate."

Lloyd paused again. "Well?"

Earl asked.

"Well," Lloyd echoed. "Rivers arrested Toby for breaking and entering. And upon looking into the traveling bag, the charge was substantiated."

"But how," I asked, "did Rivers know?"

"How? Why, Toby had forgotten to remove his mask! Except for that, the crime would undoubtedly have been successful."

For a moment there was silence. Then Earl said, "But the new factor? You said something about another factor in the case?"

Lloyd nodded. "That happened later. Toby explained to the police all about the joke and the bet he'd made with me. They called me on the phone and I came down and confirmed his story. However, in order to make sure everything was as Toby had said, the police called Leo Chapman at his place up in the mountains—and learned he wasn't there at all. He'd gone on an extended motor trip to Canada and wouldn't be back for a week."

"The police were willing to believe our stories, but they weren't willing to let Toby go until Leo returned. There was too much evidence against him. Furthermore, they advised me that unless I made myself scarce around the vicinity of the station house, they'd be inclined to lock me up with him as an accomplice."

Lloyd ended his tale, and there was again that twinkle in his eye. I wanted to ask him if he hadn't known that Leo was going to take that Canada trip. And I wanted to ask him also why he hadn't offered to go bail for Toby, or if, instead, he had bought the sergeant a box of cigars and told him to keep Toby in storage for a week.

But I didn't. Toby was in jail, getting his jolt, and none of us were very sorry.

Eyes Are Vital Controls

Of Many Body Activities

More than 70 per cent of the muscular activity of the human body results from impulses received from the eyes, according to the Better Vision Institute. At work and at play the eyes play a dominant role, and our muscular actions are influenced strongly by the impressions received by the eyes.

A survey of 20 common industrial and office occupations has shown that the eyes are in serious work three-quarters of the time. Improper lighting conditions or uncorrected visual defects tend to impair the efficiency of workers by fatiguing the eyes. Experiments have demonstrated that visual fatigue slows up body activity and is conducive to errors.

"If an office or a factory worker gets 'three o'clock' fatigue it would be a good idea to check up on his eyes," says the Institute. "There are millions of adult persons in the United States having relatively minor visual defects that are uncorrected. Such eyes may not cause headaches but they frequently cause 'three o'clock fatigue.' During the last hour or two of the working day the body of a worker may be tired because his eyes unassisted cannot work an eight-hour day."

Jumping Beans Stimulate Crickets

When thousands of crickets got sulky and refused to perform before the camera in a cricket plague scene, a sack of energetic jumping beans, with a lot of pituitary, was rushed by plane from Mexico City. Actual pictures of crickets were painted on the beans which then were mixed with the live crickets—which thought that it was just simply cricket and caught on right quickly. Anyway, the jumping proclivities of the oomph beans kept the crickets on the move, which kept the movie people happy.

But, as might be expected, the crickets finally carried the whole thing to extreme. They invaded the movie camp in such hordes they literally chased the players off location, spattered up the camera lens, and got into the sound equipment.

Bloomin' Parrot Was Passing Its Lesson On

Bert had spent hours trying to teach his parrot to say "Hello, Uncle," ready for the visit of his wealthy relative.

To no purpose. Uncle came—and went—and the parrot was dumb.

Bert seized the bird by the throat. "Say 'Hello, Uncle,' or I'll wring your bloomin' neck," he roared.

And when silence continued he twisted the bird's neck and threw it into the fowl pen.

Queer squawks drew him to the fowl pen next morning. On the ground were three dead hens. The parrot had a fourth by the neck, shaking him and shouting: "Say, 'Hello, Uncle,' or I'll wring your bloomin' neck."

AROUND the HOUSE

Items of Interest to the Housewife

Cookies should be cooled completely before storing in a covered jar or box.

Candied cranberries are just as effective as candied cherries for garnishing winter foods.

If your kitchen storage space is limited, make file-like shelves in a lower cupboard and use them for storing lids, pie and cake pans and other flat utensils. This will be a time-saver.

Try this candle arrangement for a youngster's birthday cake: Arrange small candles to form the numerals telling the age. Or place them on the cake to form the child's initials. If the first name is short it can be spelled out with thin candles or small, hard candies.

To remove mustard stains from linen, soak the linen as quickly as possible in cold water to cover. This loosens the mustard so that it will come out when laundered in the usual way—in plenty of warm water and soap suds.

Be careful not to season meat gravies so much that they lose their characteristic flavors. Usually salt and pepper or paprika are enough. If you like a prepared meat sauce add only a dash. Better yet, pass the sauce and let the family use what they please.

Crowned Before Born

Shapur II of Persia was the only king who was crowned before birth, the coronation, which consisted of placing the royal circlet on the head of his waiting cradle, taking place three days before he was born in 310, says Collier's.

Inez de Castro of Portugal was the only queen who was crowned after death, the coronation, for which her body was exhumed and set on the throne, taking place two years after she was murdered in 1355.

Benefits to Our Readers

THE PUBLIC nature of advertising benefits everyone it touches. It benefits the public by describing exactly the products that are offered. It benefits employees, because the advertiser must be more fair and just than the employer who has no obligation to the public. These benefits of advertising are quite apart from the obvious benefits which advertising confers—the lower prices, the higher quality, the better service that go with advertised goods and firms.

Accenting the Width Of a Narrow Room

By RUTH WYETH SPEARS

ON A Thursday afternoon the south end of a certain dining room was as shown here in the upper sketch. The following Monday it appeared as shown below. Cupboards had been added to display china and give storage space, yet the room actually seemed wider and more spacious than before. The transformation was made by the handy man with no tools but a hammer, saw and screw driver plus the aid of his willing helper with needle, thread and paint brush. The new curtain treatment, shown in the sketch, made the window seem wider and the strong horizontal lines of the cupboards also helped to create an illusion of width. The cupboards were eight inches deep and made of one-inch lumber with doors of plywood for the lower part.

NOTE: Mrs. Spears' Books 1 and 3 are full of other practical ideas for making and hanging curtains. Each book has 32 pages of pictures showing you how to modernize and beautify your home. Send order to:

Explosive Dusts

Among the various household dusts that have been known to explode when coming in contact with a flame or a spark are those of face powder, chocolate, dried milk, sugar and flour, says Collier's.

Not so long ago in England a woman threw a bag of old flour down the incinerator shaft of an apartment house and the resultant explosion killed her and three other tenants, and wrecked the building.

Watch Your Kidneys!

Help Them Cleanse the Blood of Harmful Body Waste
Your kidneys are constantly filtering waste matter from the blood stream. But kidneys sometimes lag in their work—do not act as Nature intended—fail to remove impurities that, if retained, may poison the system and upset the whole body machinery. Symptoms may be nagging backache, persistent headache, attacks of dizziness, getting up nights, swelling, puffiness under the eyes—a feeling of nervous anxiety and loss of pep and strength. Other signs of kidney or bladder disorder are sometimes burning, scanty or too frequent urination. There should be no doubt that prompt treatment is wiser than neglect. Use Doan's Pills. Doan's have been winning new friends for more than forty years. They have a nation-wide reputation. Are recommended by grateful people the country over. Ask your neighbor!
